LLS 496 Seminar in Latina/o Studies

Topic: Excavations: Latinx Nonfiction and Workshop - Despite the disparate number of Latinx writers being published in the United States, historically and contemporarily, the premise of this class creative nonfiction workshop hinges on the idea that you are the expert of your experience, meaning you are best positioned to tell your life story, and that those stories inherently have worth. As such, we will excavate the most meaningful moments of our lives, the relevant histories that have shaped our personal and communal experiences, and collapse time—the past and the present—to create the most meaningful narratives of our futures. In this class we will investigate the relationships between process and craft, memory and research, fact and truth to explore the personal and public experiences of our diverse lives from the complex communities we inhabit. In addition to reading and discussing published works by contemporary Latinx writers, we will write work and receive feedback from our fellow classmates in workshop.
